Gayle Giles, Founder & CEO

What does someone with a master's degree in finance and extensive experience in administration know about pinch pleats, color swatches, and motorized shades? A ton, if you're Gayle Giles, owner of Classic Interior Solutions!

Adjusting from the corporate financial planning to becoming entrepreneur as a "designing woman" is one bold step. Gayle says, “Even though I was working in the corporate arena, I was always the first one friends and family would call with decorating questions – especially when it came to window treatments,” Gayle admits. “Finally, about four years ago, I decided it was ‘now or never’ to go full-time into the decorating business. I’m so glad I did!”

Gayle believes that her extensive corporate experience allows her to look at a decorating project from a slightly different vantage point than most professionals. A key ingredient of every successful project is for the clients to have a clear understanding of the budget required to create the decor of their dreams.

She pointed out that, “In addition to creating a beautiful, functional look, my approach also incorporates the practical side of the equation. Yes, you want the project, to be a ‘wow.’ But, just as important, it must be functional and within the client’s financial means, otherwise the client will be very disappointed.”

Case in point: for kitchen remodeling projects, Gayle often advises clients on such key elements as the selection of appliances, countertops, flooring, and cabinetry. Gayle conducts a 50 Point in-depth consultation to gather the necessary information regarding the clients' habits, preferences and budget criteria. “Exploring these questions at the onset with the client goes a long way in creating a final product to exceed their expectations,” notes Gayle, who enjoys this intermediary, consultative role, and works closely with the client's contractor and each of the various service and/or product providers to deliver top-notch results.

“I am committed that all clients save time and money in a stress-free process that delivers results far beyond their expectations.” say Gayle.
